On August 15th, Apple Inc. announced that it had signed a new contract with the four major Chinese smartphone makers that would expand its availability in China, where its share of the global smartphone market has been growing. "With the fourth quarter of 2017, our China business had the largest growth rate in history, as well as new opportunities for growth," Tim Cook, Apple's chief executive, told reporters in a conference call. Cook said the four companies, including Xiaomi, the phone maker that is already among the best-selling in the U.S. and is known for its low-cost phones, had been running their own independent sales channels for iPhones. Tim Cook and other Apple executives said they were also optimistic about sales of the company's new iPhone 8 models, which Apple introduced at a preview event on Tuesday. "We are really excited about the new iPhone 8," said Rob Enderle, a technology analyst at the Enderle Group, a research firm that analyzes the smartphone industry. "The hardware is good. You get a decent camera system, a solid display and a very nice design." The iPhone 8 models are expected to be available in stores on Friday. The new phones are the most expensive Apple has offered in years. Apple also is expected to release a new 5.5-inch iPhone X, which will have a screen that can display video, and will be available in stores on Nov. 3. The phones are a huge contrast to the current iPhone 7, which has been available for months. For the first time, Apple didn't launch a new model at a worldwide retail event. Instead, Apple took its global press conference to China, which has become the company's fastest-growing market for iPhones and other products. The iPhone 7 and 7 Plus, which were released in 2016, cost $649 and $749, respectively, and have become mainstays for Apple in many markets. Cook said the new models would start at $1,099 and $1,249, respectively. "This is the first time we are doing the global press event in China," Cook said. "We are 82157476af
